Always be aware of market risks – never invest money you cannot afford to lose. All investments can go down as well as up. Investing in securities entails risks. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance. The value of stocks and shares and the income produced by dividends and other products may fluctuate, so that an investor may get back less than he invested. Investments in the entities and/or the securities or other financial instruments referred to may not be suitable for all investors and the opinions expressed in the Collective Intelligence publications should not be relied upon in substitution for the exercise of independent judgment and suitable professional advice in relation to any investment decision that you make.

The stated price of any securities mentioned in our publications will generally be the closing price at the end of any of the three business days immediately prior to the publication date of the relevant article. This stated price is not a representation that any transaction can be effected at this price.

Stocks and shares listed on overseas exchanges may be subject to additional dealing and exchange rate charges, administrative costs, withholding taxes and different accounting and reporting standards. They may have other tax implications, and may not provide the same, or any, regulatory protection. Exchange rate charges may adversely affect the value of shares in sterling terms, and you could lose money in sterling even if the stock price rises in the currency of origin. Any performance statistics that do not adjust for exchange rate changes are likely to result in an inaccurate portrayal of real returns for sterling-based investors.
